

Honours in Psychology - Research Stream and Work Integrated Stream

From 2019 a new two-stream structure was applied to the honours program. This change was a response to student feedback highlighting an interest in having more work based experience, and the value of having the ability to opt for a stream that suits career interests. The two streams are the Research Stream and the Work Integrated Stream.

Importantly, both streams lead to the same opportunities regarding postgraduate study and entering the workforce. No stream is more advantageous than the other, and the streams are in place simply to allow students to opt for one that suits their interests. What does matter is the final honours class regardless of stream, which is a weighted cumulative GPA from fourth year courses.

The Research Stream includes a one-on-one 8 unit thesis supervised by a School academic and involves students undertaking all thesis components such as data collection and analysis independently. This stream would suit students who intend to go on with research, such as enrolling in a PhD. Supervisor information and preferences are available in January each year.

The Work Integrated Stream involves a shorter 6 unit team thesis which is collaborative in nature where students will also complete a work placement at an organisation arranged by the School. This stream would suit students who intend to enter the workforce after honours (which could be in a diverse range of organisations). Supervisor information and preferences are available in January each year.

Entry into either stream is not determined by GPA. However, if too many students choose one stream relative to the number of available places, a GPA minimum will be applied to remain in that stream. You will be required to nominate your preferred stream in response to your offer, and your place in that stream will be confirmed via email by Friday 10 January 2020.

An information session detailing specific honours entry requirements, enrolment, and differences between the streams is also available here: <https://psychology.uq.edu.au/study/honours/honours-application-details>

If you have applied for honours, or are progressing through to honours in 2020, please check your email regularly (for UQ students, correspondence is only sent to your student email account).
